

PA to hold 'national unity' talks with Hamas today

By JON IMMANUEL and news agencies

A meeting of the Palestinian Authority and opposition groups, including Hamas, is to be held in Gaza today and tomorrow in an attempt to find common ground in light of the latest deterioration in the peace DTOCESS.

A preparatory meeting yesterday for what have been dubbed "national unity" talks dealt with issues for the agenda. Hamas is demanding release of its prisoners, and a united stand against US and Israeli pres-Arafat has called for the dialogue to include arrest Harnas activists based on a list sup plied by Israel.

Jamal Mansour, a leading Islamic radicat from Nablus, said in the Ramallah-based Al-Ayam daily yesterday that Hamas partic-ipation would depend on the agenda of the meeting. Abdul-Aziz Rantisi, Gaza's leading Hamas representative, said yesterday an acceptable agenda had been achieved.

Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu termed Hizbnllah's launching of Katyusha rockets at civilian targets in the Galilee yesterday. "a most blatant violation" of the agreemeots concluded after last year's Operation Grapes of Wrath. He said that Israel will act to make sure this is not repeated. Netanyahu also appealed to Syria to rein in Hizbullah. "Syria is able to stop this shooting. It must understand that it is also its interest. We are in contact with the US, which has already turned to Syria on this issue," he said. Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai said that "the war

Chief of General Staff LL-Gen. Amnon Lipkin-Shahak and other generals briefed the ministers. During the meeting, sources said, it was decided to try to stabilize the situatioo and refrain from needless confrontation. OC Northern Command Maj.-Gen. Amiram Levine, a strong advocate of offensive operatioos, also briefed the ministers on methods of hitting at Hizbullah. Shahak added later that the only true way to end the violence is through a political agreement and urged the government of Lebanon to enforce its sovereignty. "We bave a long war against Hizbullah," Shahak told Army Radio. "There is a very strange situation where although there is a governmeot io Lebanon, Hizbullah is making its own policy. Political leaders and army commanders talked tough following yesterday's massive Katyusha attack on the North, but quietly urged restraint and a return to normal life.

Despite the heavy attack, injuries and damage were light. Three rocket salvos shattered the Galilee shortly after 7 a.m.. They struck cities, a kibbutz, and empty fields. One Israeli man was lightly injured and a Lebanese woman was also reported Hizbullah claimed responsibility for the attack, saying it was in response to the SLA shelling of Sidon on Monday, which killed at least six civilians and wounded some 35. But Hizbullah leader Sheikh Hassan Nasrallah, appearing to support a return to calm, said his group is now interested in honoring the agreement not to attack civilians. Many residents of the North, which was in the midst of its busy vacation season, spent the night in shelters and security rooms in anticipation of the barrage, even though the army had not called on residents to do so. Such a call came after the after several hours. "There is a feeling that the story basn't yet ended," said Hadash Bunick, of Kiryat Shmona. "The army hasn't given us any instructions to take shelter, but no one is taking any chances. You can't rely on miracles." Last night, the entire region was on alert. Over 80 Katyushas were reportedly fired; the IDF confirmed that some 45 landed inside the country, most in open fields. UNIFIL sources said about three-quarters of the rockets hit in the Western Galilee and some fell into the sea. The large number indicates that Hizbullah has no shortage of the 122 um. rockets. It also appeared that Hizbullah tried to deliberately target unpopulated areas to avoid high casualties The IDF did not respond to the Katyushas, which were fired from a wide area inside south Lebanon. IDF sources said that the intention was to refrain from immediate action that could ignite the front. "The IDF is ready, and it will continue to be ready on this and the other side of the border," Chief of General Staff Lt.-Gen. Amnon Lipkin-Shahak told reporters in the Western Galilee. A source in Northern Command said that there have been no unusual troop movements. He dismissed a report on Channel 2 last night of 155 mm, antillery headed across the border as being taken out of context.

"The intention is to return life to normal and the line is one of restraint," the source said,

In south Lebanon, bundreds of residents fled their homes in anticipation of Israeli retaliation. Reports said the refugees flooded into Tyre with their belongings strapped to their cars and set up a tent city.

The Katyusha attack called into question the effectiveness of the five-nation Grapes of Wrath moni-toring group. Israel and Lebanon have both called for the group to meet. Reports from Lebanon said it will do so tomorrow at the UNIFIL headquarters in Nakoura. It will be its 16th meeting since last year's cease-fire.

In Beirut, Nasrallah said that Hizbullah would order the Katyushas to cea strike at civilians. He said his organization was ready to abide by the agreement's "spirit and content, on condition that the side that violated it also abides by it."

aimed at winding down the current escalatioo by refraining from instant retaliation.

Netanyahu and the cabinet members who accompanied him on his tour - Foreign Minister David Levy, Finance Minister Yaakov Neeman, and National Infrastructure Minister Ariel Sharon - indicated that Israel's objective is to reduce tensions in southern Lebanon and refrain from unnecessary confrontations. "The immediate goal is to halt the cycle of escalation which does not serve the interest of any side," an official statement, issued by Netanyahu's media adviser Shai Bazak, said. Israel wants both the citizeos of Israel and Lebanon to live in tranquility, it added. At the policymaking level, how-ever, Israel accused Hizbullah of multiple violations of the Grapes of Wrath agreement. "The ultimate breach was the launching of Katyushas at Kiryat Shmona a week ago and again this morning all along the northern frontier," one official said.

Mordechai also urged the Lebanese government to act more decisively so that citizens on both sides will not be harmed because of Hizbullah's irresponsibility.

In an interview with AP, Nasrallah sought to defuse the tension, saying both sides should "reach a situation whereby civilians feel safe."

The three rocket barrages began around 7 a.m. One rocket slammed into the Kalina family home in Kirvat Shmona. Fortunately, the family was vacationing out of town.

"We thought of going home on Monday, but decided to stay for one more day because of the tension." said Inbal Kalina. "It's unbelievable how lucky we were."

Less fortunate was Ehud Mold, 49, a resident of the Golan Heights town of Katzrin. Mold was on his way to work in Kiryat Shruona when a Katyusha exploded a few meters from his car. Shrapnel wounded him in the leg. Elsewhere in the North, the rockets knocked down electric lines and hit a few structures, causing moderate damage. In Nahariya, patients housed in wooden structures ontside the government hospital's main building were transferred to the basement, where they waited out the rocket attack.

A new diagnosis for the power hungry

By JUDY SIEGEL

What do Hitler, Saddam Hussein, and Pol Pot have in common? An Israeli psychotherapist has suggested the introduction of a new diagnostic category: excessive power strivings.

Writing in the latest issue of the Israel Journal of Psychiatry, Dr. Israel Charny of the Hebrew University suggests that none of the existing categories in the psychiatric "bible," the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders IV, is relevant to the issues of excessive power-seeking. comption, and destructiveness. Charny, who teaches at the university's Martin Buber Center, notes that "excessive power strivings poison the personality of the individual... and do unacceptable harm to other peoples' lives."

The DSM-IV conventionally catalogues psychiatric disorders that affect patients' own selves; Chamy's suggestion would be a condition in which a person harms others.

Hizbullah sees itself as committed to the Grapes of Wrath understandings, but felt the need to respond to Monday's attacks on civilians by the South Lebanese Army with Katyusha rockets, OC Intelligence Maj .-Gen. Moshe Ya'aloo told the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee yesterday. According to an official briefing. Ya'alon also noted that it was the first time that the Lebanese Army had fired on the Jezinne enclave. He said that it is clear that Hizbullah has been restrained by Syria and still operates under Syrian auspices, although it does take independent action. Ya'alon said there is a clear struggle goiog on within the Hizbullah between former secretary-general Subhi Tufeli and current secretary-general Hassan Nasrallah.

He said the Lehanese Army is operating against Tufeli's branch, which called for a war on the Lehanese government, and has apparently had some success in reducing its actions. Meretz leader Yossi Sarid con-

Weizman backs residents of North

By BATSHEVA TSUR

President Ezer Weizman last night came out in support of the criticism of the authorities voiced by angry residents of settlements in the North, But he also praised the government's policy of restraint, saying that only a diplomatic solution with Syria could bring quiet to the area. Weizman and his wife Reuma expressed their solidarity with the northern settlements by spending the night in a hotel near the border.

The policy of restraint is wise. It has its limits but right now, it's the correct thing to do... The citi-zens would oot like to see an escalation," Weizman told Channel 1. Turning to the complaints voiced by the civilians he had met during his tour, Weizman said: "It's not possible that when the Katyushas hit, government representatives arrive here and try to start solving problems. There is, unfortunately, damage from earlier Katyusha attacks: there are unrepaired holes in roofs, damage to the tourist trade... The criticism is quite justified. Why do they have to suggest building a new neighborhood today? Couldn't this have been suggested before?"

Weizman said he had visited a kibbutz where not everyone has a security room. "I strongly suggest that the treatment of the North be ongoing and not just at the moment when something happens," he said.

Meretz leader Yossi Sarid yesterday turned down an invitation to join a delegation led by Foreign Minister David Levy to the UN in September. Sarid, a member of the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee, was invited to join the delegation as an adviser, Sarid said he could not be a member of a delegation whose political message is completely unacceptable to him, "This government's policies are fraught with dangers and I will not serve as a fig leaf. I would be deceiving myself if I did not say in New York all I say in Jerusalem," he said.

At least 125 Palestinians have been held in Palestinian Authority jails for more than a year without any charges against them, according to the Palestinian Human Rights Monitoring Group (PHRMG).

Nonetheless, the group said that the overall human rights situation has improved slightly during the three years the PA has been in office Those jailed without charges include suspected Islamic radicals and collaborators.

In a report issued yesterday, PHRMG observed that the most serious problem is the routine intervention of the security services in the judicial system.

The decision to rule Palestine by exclusively legal means has not been taken, despite numerous public statements by PA figures including President [Yasser] Arafat," the report said.

"Our conclusion is there are laws but they are not implemented," said PHMRG director Bassem Eid.

New Attorney-General Fayez Abu Rahme is considered more professional than the recently deposed Khalid al-Kidrah, who was forced to resign after allegations of taking bribes. Abu Rahme was chairman of the Gaza Bar Association for 14 years and Al-Kidrah was his deputy for part of that time, but he too is circumscribed

The Palestinian Society for the Protection of Human Rights and the Environment reported yesterday that 10 Hamas members, who had been released by Abu Rahme on Friday after 16 months in jail, were re-arrested a few hours later on Arafat's instructions. Two prison officials were arrested for complying with the Abu Rahme's instructions.

Abu Rahme's second most notable act so far was to criticize the trial of the three suspects in the murder of Israeli taxi driver Shmuel Ben-Baruch. The three were civilians, he said, and should have been tried in a civilian court, as "it is impossible to do justice in half an hour." He has also promised to release 180 prisoners and has released 27 alleged collaborators. One of the most blatant violations of human rights involves Fathi Subuh, a professor of education at Gaza's Al-Azhar University. He set an examination which asked students to give their opinion on PA corruption. He was arrested July 2, was not allowed to see his wife or a lawyer for a month, and was told his arrest was for security offenses unconnected with the exam. However, police searched his offices and took away the students' written answers, said Eid.

On July 12, the High Court in Gaza ordered the attomey-general to explain within eight days wby Subuh was in jail. He did not respond, and Subuh is still in jail.

Among the human rights improvements Eid includes "a readiness by the PA to read human rights reports and to respond, to meet with human rights officials, and to stop arresting them "

Abu Rahme responded to the report by saying Gaza needs new laws concerning the procedure of arrest and investigation, and attributed deficiencies to the "modification and changes in the law which bave been made necessary to agree with society's current needs."

In an earlier report the PHRMG noted two deaths from torture this year, and more than 85 torture cases.

Parents, teachers fight cuts

By ARYEH DEAN COHEN

The Secondary School Teachers Association yesterday became the Education Ministry's latest ally in the fight against proposed cuts in the education budget, joining a rapidly growing coalition to block the opening of the school year on September 1 unless the cuts are rescinded.

The association's leaders told Education Minister Zevulun Hammer of their decision in a meeting in Jerusalem, saying the cuts would have a harsh impact on the educational system.

"The system is collapsing before our eyes," Ron Erez, chairman of the organization's leadership, said. "We declared a work dispute on the matter in June, when the idea of the cuts was first raised, and the ministry promised us then there wouldn't be cuts. Today, two weeks before the opening of school, the minister and the director-general agree with us that the situation is intolerable.

"The drastic cut in the budget will completely paralyze the system, and increase the overflow in the classrooms, which are already overcrowded. Today, the system can devote about a minute per pupil per class. The cuts mean fewer pupils will learn, and even fewer will excel." The union demanded Hammer make the government aware of the situation's seriousness, and demand an immediate change in policy.

"The teachers won't be able to just go through the motions, and get up in front of their classes on September l, knowing how little they can offer them this year," Erez said.

Meanwhile, National Parents Association representatives joined the anti-cuts coalition, telling Hammer it would block the opening of school if proposed cuts are not rescinded.

Association chairman Shai Lachmann said the group told Hammer that "we fully support his position, and we appealed to the prime minister to stand by his commitment to the long school day."

Lachmann said the cuts would not only result in the cutting of 70,000 classroom hours, but would also mean schools in dire need of air conditioning would not receive it.

Hammer, meanwhile, announced plans to pursue legislation to set a minimum number of classroom hours per pupil and class, to prevent the reduction of class hours through the type of budget cuts the educational system is facing right now.

Hammer said that in the nation's 50th year, it was about time the govemment and the Knesset commit themselves in law to a set number of classroom hours.

"By doing so, I hope to wipe out once and for all repeated shake-ups which hurt the educational system. every time the government or the Knesset decide on cuts in the Education Ministry budget," he said.

Hamas officials in Damascus expressed their own views.

"We demand that Arafat admit the failure of the Oslo agreement He has two options, to declare a general conscription, renew the intifada and join Hamas and Islamic Jihad in their struggle against Israel or to resign and admit defeat," said Abu Mohammed Mustafa.

The left-wing PLO groups confirmed their participation.

Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, a PLO executive committee member, had modest expectations of the meeting.

"Our priority is not to resume negotiations until Israel ceases all settlement activity," he said.

Although the talks are unlikely to unite pro-and anti-Oslo forces, they are likely to increase the militancy of Arafat's posture.

The category, however, can include people other than political leaders, Charny says.

"Excessive power strivings are not only visited upon lawyers, generals, and politicians, but are present in a wide variety of human beings, whenever internal and external checks and balances on the distribution of power and moral codes as to the value and inviolability of other people are not successfully promoted or internalized."

Such people can be found in schools, sports, adult work contexts, and many other areas of life in which people devote them-. selves to capturing control of a system.

Such a person will always demonstrate intense and extensive power strivings, but at least three of the following other characteristics must also be present before a diagnosis can be made: lack of empathy for and indifference to the suffering of others; "streetsmart" alertness and cunning devoted to scizing and expanding

ł,

power, stepping on other people regardless of damage to them; scapegoating and projection of blame onto targeted individuals or a group, with an insistent need to identify certain others as lowly, worthless, and "deserving" victims; corruption by and addiction to power; demands that other people be dependent or become obedient followers; emphasis on concepts such as pure vs. impure, holy vs. infidel, chosen vs. con-demned; an absence of conscience in matters that are self-serving; and a homicide/suicide orientation

Charny explains that psychiatry has traditionally believed that a mentally ill person "is disorga-nized and unable to function well for himself," thus there is virtually no tradition of formally diagnosing people who themselves function well but are committed to damaging the capacity of others to function. Ironically, people who hurt others might seem to be mentally healthy, for their "concentration of energy, skills, and purpose will often be far superior to that of others who are subject to greater emotional and moral complexitv."

Ramat Hovav to undergo epidemiological survey

The Health and Environment ministries yesterday agreed to conduct an epidemiological survey of staffers of the Ramat Hovay dump in the Negev and of neighboring residents and to prepare joint policy regarding the site as a sanitation hazard. A plan for conducting the survey will be presented within two months, and a ioint team will recommend what tests need to be conducted, study the data, and decide whether the dump site poses any danger to staffers and residents of the area.

This will be the first-ever epidemiological survey of this area the Health Ministry said. Judy Siegel

Olmert: Histadrut move decision 'grave'

The Histadrut's decision not to move its headquarters from Tel Aviv 10 Jerusalem is "really grave," Jerusalem Mayor Ehud Olmert said yesterday.

"It's really unfortunate that they made this decision," he said.

Last week, following disagreements between Finance Minister Yaakov Neeman and Histadrut Chairman Amir Peretz, the Histadrut decided to revoke the decision to move its headquarters to Jerusalem. The Treasury, which had previously said that it would takeover the Histadrut's Tel Aviv offices, said that it could not afford to renovate them. Histadrut employees' complaints about the commute also contributed to the final decision, Olmen said. Jennifer Friedlin

Bashari new Science Ministry D-G

Dr. Mordechai Bashari was yesterday appointed director-general of the Science Ministry, replacing Zvi Yanai, who asked to leave after four years in the post. Science Minister Michael Eitan had consulted on the appointment with Deputy Defense Minister Silvan Shalom, who is due to take over as science minister in 11 months under a rotation agreement.

Bashari has a doctorate in theoretical physics and was previously deputy director-general and chief scientist of the Communications Ministry. In recent years, he has been a private adviser to industry. Judy Siegel

Ayalon Mall refuse could have poisoned Yarkon

By BATSHEVA TSUR

Refuse discarded at the site of the Ayalon Mall could have blocked the free flow of the Yarkon River and led to the massive build-up of toxins that poi-soned victims of the Maccabiah disaster last month.

Nehama Ronen, director-general of the Environment Ministry, told Knesset State Control

Committee yesterday that shopping colleys and other garbage from the mall were thrown into the river. The rivers in Israel are filled with trash, not with water," she said. But a Health Ministry expert, Shalom Goldberger, said that there might be more than one factor that had led to the toxic buildup. The tests had revealed that there was a variety of toxins, he said.

A gloomy picture of the future garbage, he said. of the country's drinking water was also painted by an expert from the local councils authority, who said that the failure to bury hatteries in home use in a safe place is leading to extensive pollution. A few kilograms of nickel-cadmium from these batteries is enough to poison millions of cubic meters of water and it is imperative to collect batteries separately from other

The meeting was called by chairman Yossi Katz (Labor), despite the Knesset's summer recess. "In other countries, govemments fall over environmental issues, while here everyone is apathetic," Katz said.

He noted that the state comptroller's report had come down exceptionally heavily on the disposal of dangerous waste products at the Ramat Hoyay dump.

Ronen added that the council running the dump had not begun operating the burner that had become operable a month ago and that various other ecological defects had not been corrected.

Katz said that the Rumat Hoyay site is suffering because of disputes between the ministry and the council. He called on the prime minister to intervene and save the situation.

Ministry eases controls on drugs

By JUDY SIEGEL

Major changes in the supervision and control of pharmaceuticals will be made as a result of decisions made by Health Minister Yehoshua Matza yesterday.

According to the ministry, drugs from the US, Canada and the European Union - which have already been licensed for use in the original country - will be approved for use here by the Health Ministry in a speedy process. In addition, the entire registration process of drugs from any other countries will be carried out in up to three months; now it can take many more months or even years.

A committee appointed by ministry director-general Prof. Gahi Barabash will next week present its recommendations on setting the prices of imported drugs, and guidelines will be issued during the first half of September. Parallel imports of medications by entrepreneurs and health funds in addition to official importers will begin from early 1998.

The ministry said that a special committee will formulate new policies for price supervision of locally manufactured drugs; the committee will consist of representatives from the Health and Finance ministries, as well as outsiders.

Matza said that these changes will bring about major savings in the he cost o medications by 20% to 40%. Matza said that after launching these efficiency measures, he feels he has "a moral hasis" for demanding that the Treasury do its part to finance the deficits in the health system.

This led to the lifting of the Arab boycott, the opening of new markets and a stream of foreign investments.

The government's economic policy of hudget cuts and reforms is a step in the right direction. But it appears that Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu's sabotaging of the peace process, logether with the terrorist attacks and long closure, have caused the change in the economic atmosphere, the economic slowdown and the increase in unemployment.

Bibi and the cheerleaders Ha'arer:'s Hanna Kim focuses on the organized "spontaneous" groups which materialize in the most inappropriate placea to demonstrate their support for Netanyahu.

One such bizarre spectacle took place outside the Caesarea villa where the Netanyahus were vacationing, and was the first demonstration ever to be held in Israel in support of a prime minister's vacation. Who are these anonymous demonstrators, wonders Kim, who are more disturbed by Netanyahu's image plight than by the stalemate in the peace process, the breakdown of relations with the Arab world, the increase in unemployment, the threat of a general strike and the possibility that the school year won't begin on time?

At first they were presented by Channels 1 and 2 as Caesarea residents who prepared a "warm welcome" for the prime minister. Then it turned out they were either a group from Pardess Hanna (Ha'aretz) or Likud members from settlements near Caesarea (Ma ariv).

No less bizarre was the demonstration at the opening of the court case by former nanny Tania Shaw against Sara Netanyahu, where an anonymous group demonstrated against Shaw and in support of Netanyahu.

Both demonstrations smell of distant regimes, says Kim.

Discovery back after day's delay

By MARCIA DUNN

1 the derugate

CAPE CANAVERAL, Florida (AP) - After a day's delay, space shuttle Discovery and its crew of six returned to Earth yesterday with a satellite containing valuable ioformation about Earth's ozone layer.

The space plane glided through a pale, mostly clear sky and landed at Kennedy Space Center just after sunrise, ending a 12-day journey for science.

"Welcome home. Looked like a perfect flight from start to finish," Mission Control told commander Curtis Brown Jr.

"And Discovery's glad to be home," Brown replied.

Throughout the morning, flight controllers had kept close watch on the hazy sky over Kennedy. But unlike on Monday, the condioons were judged to be safe and Brown got the go-ahead to come home. The shuttle passed over Guatemala and Belize, out over the Caribbean Sea west of Cuba, and northward into Florida and NASA's spaceport. A full moon helped light the way.

An hour before Monday's scheduled touchdown, NASA decided to delay the landing because of fears that pre-dawn haze might turn into fog. No fog developed, though.

During their flight, the five US astronauts and one Canadian worked with an environmental satellite, tested a small robot arm designed for the future international space station and observed the comet Hale-Bopp with an ultraviolet telescope.

During its nine days of free flight, the satellite measured atmospheric temperatures and gases, including those responsi-hle for ozone depletion. Virtually all the findings - enough to fill oearly a balf-ton of computer disks - are recorded and stored on board.

"There was nothing that could have gone better," German project manager Konrad Moritz exulted shortly after Discovery landed. Scienosts hope to get their data in about a mooth, once the satellite and its recorders are unloaded. "They're bugging us all the time, 'Could we get it a week earlier?" " Moritz said. "It will take them a year or so, at least, to get through the data,"

Naval Research Laboratory pbysicist Robert Conway is especially eager to get his data. His ultraviolet telescope on the satellite found evidence of a surprisingly large amount of water vapor high above the northernmost laotudes, which tends to support the cootroversial theory that giant space snowballs are pelting Earth's atmosphere.

Next up for NASA: a ferry trip by space shuttle Atlantis to Russia's crippled space station Mir. Launch is scheduled for September 25.

Once Atlantis lifts off and docks, NASA's replacement for Mir astronaut Michael Foale, David Wolf, will have to stay up there no matter what --- the shuttle won't have an extra seat to bring Wolf back.

There was something obscene about the smirking dignitaries gathered where they were unable to look into the eyes of the starving people roaming far back in the hinterland. About 200 of these elite foreign-

The aggressive bullying will continue until this ghastly regime is overthrown. "Build us new reactors or we'll build atomic bombs" may give way to "feed our people or we'll send five million starving refugees south."

And anyway, they might attack the south without warning in an orgy of mutual destruction, as they did once before.

That attitude was displayed when an American delegation of seven from the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, trying to assess the needs of the people, was harassed and denied access to famine areas on a recent fact-finding trip.

Here is the obsessive secrecy of a paranoid ruler. He wishes to save his own neck by getting urgent food aid into the country - yet denies the donors the right to determine how much is needed where. Food distribution is a military secret. So, it would appear, is shame. Iraq to allow Iranians to visit its shrines

BAGHDAD (Reuter) - Iraq will inform the Iranian Embassy in Baghdad of its decision to allow visits by Iranians to Iraq's Shi'ite shrines, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said yesterday.

Baghdad radio said on Monday that President Saddam Hussein had decided to allow Iranian visits to the shrines, suspended since the start of the 1980-88 Iraq-Iran war, to resume from September 4.

An Iranian official was quoted as saying that Baghdad had not officially told Iran of its decision and that talks should be held between the two countries before the visits could start.

"We will inform the Embassy of 1997." the Islamic Republic of Iran in Baghdad that what has been announced on August 18, 1997 ... is an official decision and it is valid as from September 4, 1997," the Iraqi spokesman, quoted by Baghdad radio. said.

He said talks between the two countries on receiving Iranian visitors had started in 1990, but had reached no results. The spokesman said it is up to the Iranian government to allow its people 10 visit the shrines and Iraq would be "ready to receive Iranian citizens willing to visit haq's religious shrines as from September 4, Ugandan president Yoweri Museveni, who along with other east African leaders is involved in a regional iniciative to cod the 14year eivil war in Sudan, would also be present, Mandela said. Bashir was in Pretoria last week seeking Mandela's help as a mediator in getting Garang to consent to peace talks.

Garang leads Sudan's largest rebel group, the Sudan People's Liberadon Army. He has steadfastly refused to sign a peace agreement that six other southernbased rebel groups have made with Bashir. The SPLA has ptedged to fight until Bashir is overthrown.

Mandela said he has been in touch with Bashir, Garang and Museveni, and it was likely they would meet in South Africa. He did not specify a date, although Mandela's staff said it could be within the coming weeks.

Last week, foreign affairs officials denied Sudanese reports that Mandela would meet with Garang. The two leaders last met in December.

Talks scheduled for this week in Nairobi between Bashir and Garang were cancelled with no explanation. The Sudanese agreement with the other six rebel groups calls for limited autonomy for the south's Christians and animists from the Moslem oorth. The southerners have been promised that in four years, they will be allowed to vote on secession.

Nudists hold convention

By MICHAEL GRACZYK

WASHINGTON, Texas (AP) -The scene at the registration office shows that this is not your typical campground.

"Can I get some ice here?" a man wearing nothing but sandals and a sun tan asks an office attendant. Some 1,500 people, giving new meaning to the phrase "traveling light," gathered last week at the Live Oak Resort about 135 km. northwest of Houston for the 66th annual national convention of the American Association for Nude Recreation. "We are a cross-section of America - your friends, your neighbors, your coworkers," said Leonite Moore, of Tulsa, Oklahoma, president of the 50,000-member group the nation's oldest and largest mudist organization.

Live Oak is one of 225 resorts in North America affiliated with the association. The only state without a site is Alaska, where it can get a bit chilly for naked volleyball.

But the annual meeting isn't all sunbathing and birthday suits. The association also has to conduct serious business.

Seated around tables, officers discuss annual dues (about $60 a year for couples), lobbying efforts, legal matters and public relations. Some are wearing T-shirts, others have only a towel - to sit on.

Roslyn Scheer, executive director of the Kissimmee, Florida-based group, had just returned from the National Convention of State Legislators.

"Basically, our message is we don't need any new laws that have to do with nudity," she said, adding that her booth was among the most popular with lawmakers attending the gathering in Philadelphia.

The nuclists have to deal with some inconveniences. Without pockets, they are forced to find creative ways to hold their keys, change or credit cards. Some members wear sun visors that have pockets. Others have wrist straps that include a small pouch, or shoes with pockets.

"Contrary to people's ideas that we're oddballs, we're not," says Nate Kates, of San Bernadino, California, who retired from an aerospace company and has been active in the association for 38 years.

"We're just as intelligent as the next guy," he said, seated at a picnic table with three friends. His only clothing was a cap.

More than 92 percent of the association's members are at least 35 years old. Almost half have annual household incomes of over $50,000. Two-thirds are married, about onefifth are retired.

"The first time I thought it was bizarre and snickered a little bit," Moore said. "But it only took one

Plan would let US citizens to see pope in Cuba

NEW YORK (AP) - US travel restrictions for Cuba may be temporarily relaxed in January when Pope John Paul II visits the Caribbean nation, The New York Times reported yesterday.

The Clinton administration is reviewing a plan that would allow thousands of US citizens to travel direct from the United States to witness the visit, scheduled to start January 21 and last five days, the Times said.

The plan would also allow Catholic churches and charides to ship supplies and equipment to help Catholic officials in Cuba organize the event, the newspaper said.

"Out of respect for His Holiness, we are facilitating travel and the delivery of certain goods," James Rubin, a spokesman for Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, told the newspaper.

Officials said that, while the administration is prepared to grant special licenses to large groups, the move does not signal a general lifting of the 30-yearold American economic embargo against the Communist nation.

Although travel itself is not banned. US citizens and residents must currently fly there from a third country. Visitors must also adhere to many restrictions on spending US dollars there.

Two-edged sword against northern Israel has reminded the country about a war it has been trying to forget, the war in Lebanon. Perhaps since there were oo lives lost in yesterday's early morning attack, the public debate bas not degenerated into another demoralizing round of calls for a unilateral Israeli withdrawal. It would be a mistake, bowever, to wait until the next tragic incideot to reexamine the choice between unpleasant alternatives in Lebanon.

This particular round began when Hizbullah bombed a civilian car in Jezzine, killing two orphans of a former South Lebanese Army commander. A local commander of the SLA retaliated with an artillery attack against civilians in Sidon, killing at least six people. Though the Israeli military denies that it knew of or could bave prevented the attack, Hizbullah retaliated by firing about 50 Katyusba rockets onto the North.

Israel will certainly retaliate against this attack, but not by attacking civilians. In fact, it is Israel's objective to try and restore the understandings reached after the April 1996 Grapes of Wrath operation, which committed all sides not to attack civilian targets. Israel has requested a meeting of the international monitoring group that was set up at that time, which includes Syria, Lebanon, France, the United States and Israel.

Though there has been speculation recently that the Grapes of Wrath understandings would not hold up much looger. Israeli officials believe that oone of the parties are looking for an escalatioo io the conflict, and therefore there is a good chance that the status quo ante can be restored. But even if the understandings are cobbled back together, the larger question of bow best to secure Israel's oorthern border is if this sbadow of politics is at least partially needs to be addressed.

Every time this question returns to the public agenda, top Israeli military and government officials correctly point out that a unilateral Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon risks bringing terrorism closer to the northern border. There is no doubt that the difficult and dangerous work of the IDF in the security zone is allowing Israel's oorthern citizens to sleep better at night, most of the time. There is also no guarantee that the alternative of defeoding the border from inside a joint approach to the Lebanese dilemma, the Israel will provide a similar level of security. Clearly, the choice betweeo defending Israel by maintaining a constant presence in southern Lebanon or attempting the same task from inside Israel is not a simple one, oor is either option a perfect solution. Leaving the security nce again, a barrage of Katyusha rockets zone risks not only bringing the threat that much closer to Israeli civilians, but decreasing Israel's ability to combat guerrilla or terrorist threats in an ongoing fashion. Further, there is Israel's moral obligation not to abandon the SLA, which bas fought not only for their own bomes but in defense of Israel's interests.

On the other band, no one can argue that the current situation is without risks and costs as well. From a military point of view, Israel's presence in Lebanon is a two-edged sword: Israel is better able to take the battle to the enemy, but the enemy is also more able to attack Israeli soldiers.

There are those who argue, in effect, that an Israeli withdrawal will solve the problem by removing Hizbullah's reason to attack Israel. It would be foolisb to take at face value assurances from Hizbullah that their only objective is to expel Israel from Lehanon, and that Israel's security problem can be solved simply by withdrawing from Lebanon. Soll, it is bard to believe that Hizbullah could maintain the tempo of its war against Israel once the primary justification of that war were removed.

Though the choice between unsavory alternatives is oot obvious, what is clear is that it should oot be clouded by political consideraoons and simple inertia. Aside from legitimate considerations, the unspokeo fear of politicians in both major parties bas been that any decision to withdraw from Lebanoo would bring swift condemnatioo from the other party if the Katyusha attacks continued. In the absence of guarantees of improved security for the alternatives, the politically safest path has been to cootinue to urge the public to grit their teeth and accept the current situation.

The only way a rational decision can be made removed. For that to bappen, the government and the oppositioo must agree oo an approach, and do so out of the limelight. MKs from across the political spectrum, such as Yossi Beilin and Gideon Ezra, bave in past mooths met to discuss Lebanon, but once such efforts became public they broke down under criticism from both sides.

If these steps are intended to lay the groundwork for the Treasury to make a gesture to the PA by releasing 30 percent of the NIS 70 million in tax receipts that were frozen following the Mahaneb Yebuda attack, they could have timed it better. They didn't have to wait for an outburst of mockery from Arafat, which would give him an excuse to claim that Israelis only understand threats

The Americans also try to understand Aralat's situation: they reason that he is forced to make aggressive speeches for internal consumption. They try to persuade us all that we shouldn't pay attendon to his offensive public outbursts against Israel (which he calls "Greater Micronesia") but should prefer secret talks and confidential accoust For example, the Palestinian police arrested the Israeli driver's murderers, and on the same day they were sentenced to hard labor and long sentences. 🗋 inyamin Netanyahu has Baltered the terms of Middle East diplomacy in a way that confirms and protects his ruling Likud Party's reluctance to yield much territory and any sovereignty to the Palestinians, Bill Clinton and his diplomats give scant sign of addressing the implications of the change. Their innocence makes American policy increasingly prone to irrelevance.

In the old days, the terms of the Israeli-Palestinian struggle were territory and peace. The Israelis would give up captured territory, the Palestinians would settle into a normal relationship. The Labor Party nailed these terms into the Oslo interim agreement of 1993, whose results Clinton hailed on the South Lawn of the White House.

Now, however, the promise of Israel returning territory bas been quietly moved off the table. What the Palestinians are now offered is not territory in the old Labor sense, though Labor slogans ("Allon Plus") are used, and certainly oot anything like even a marginal state of their own. They are offered merely a status of self-rule heavily circumscribed by Israeli prerogaoves and a relationship with the Israelis regulated by Israeli needs of the moment.

Imagine that the Palestinians did everything the Israelis asked in the way of cracking down on terrorists - everything. They would get in return just a small, dependent misshapen territory carved up by Israeli roads and vulnerable to Israeli intervention the first time a kid threw a stone.

This seems to me what the Israelis in command are pursuing. They have wedded the claims of security to the claims of ideology and produced a political configuration that cannot possibly become the basis of rage, we ask "Why?" There is, of that there are two peoples living course, the "hate factor" which finds satisfaction in the killing and maiming of Jews; but we should look beyond these self-evident psychopathic tendencies to the strategic aims of terrorism. We have had terrorist attacks when the peace process was moving forward ("the enemies of peace" attempting to stop the process), and terrorist attacks when the peace process was stalled (trying, "out of frustration," to restore momentum to the process). The critics of the government, at home and abroad, use both these mutually contradictory justifications of the uojustifiable, with a supreme disregard for logic and honest debate.

It is obvious that Palestinian-inioated violence is a deliberate negotlating mechanism, and it is goal-oriented. The strategic aim of terrorism is to help Arafat and the Palestinians, by a process of blackmail, to extort the maximum concessions from Israel, so that what is euphemistically called the "final settlement" will be an effecove launching pad for the "final solution," the elimination of the Jewish State.

To understand this strategy, we must change our mind-set. We

Just as there is only one Israeli people, despite our divergences, upon which terror is wreaked, so there is only one Palesonian people, despite their divisions, with whom we are attempong to conduct a dialogue of peace. Hamas and Islamic Jihad in their political aims are no less Palesonian than Arafat's PLO. The Hanan Ashrawis and Faisal Husseinis are the persuasive, unctuous tongues of reason, the suicide bombers and their dispatchers the blood-stained instruments, and the imams and Arafat, calling for holy jihad "with blood and fire." are co-equal insogators of violence.

In the past violence bas always worked to the Palestinians' advantage. Each ome there was an attack, our previous government reacted with two knee-jerk responses: "The peace process must go on," and "we mustn't weaken Arafat, or we shall be dealing with Hamas." When the Netanyahu government has perceived to be strong, the blackmail of terrorism for a ome ceased to be effective, but in the light of the government's more recent ambivalence of purpose strong in talk but restrained in action - the Palestinians have once more resorted to the terror weapon. What should our response be? Seeking out and destroying terrorist cells is a necessary but short-term tacoc. There is only one strategic answer to terror. First, know with whom we are dealing; and then, convince the Palestinians - by words and deeds - that the price they will in future pay for violence in all its forms will greatly exceed any immediate benefit they may hope to gaio. In conveying this mambiguous message, the government can only succeed if it is supported, rather than undermined, by the opposi-oon. The messages of appease-ment must stop. The PA, for its part, chose to reverse the Jordanian model. In the PA the military wing of Hamas is permitted relative freedom while the political leadership is targeted. The targeting of Hamas policical activity has given Hamas additional incentive for terror attacks against Israel, which it perceives as indirectly weakening the PA_

Israel must be cognizant of these complex issues and review its actions vis-a-vis the PA and Hamas accordingly. Fighting the military wing of Hamas is beyond the Palestinian security forces' ability; they exhibit neither the will nor the capacity to contend with the full extent of Hamas' international ties and fuoding. International cooperation between Israel, Arab countries and Western nations is needed It is unlikely that the PA will grant

Hamas the opportunity to develop politically rather than militarily, as in the Jordanian model. Trying to hurt the Palestinian population economically in order to strike at Hamas' popularity can also easily boomerang in an already extremely depressed Palestinian economy. the sort of negotiation that the United States encourages and that most people have in mind including, at least in good cyclcs, perhaps a majority of Israelis.

JUST two days before the latest suicide bombing, Netanyahu was publicly celebrating his success in "lowering the level of terrorism" by inducing Palestinians to undertake "restraining moves aloogside the actioos we take things which perhaps the public doesn't know of, but of which I am extremely proud."

Then the bombs went off, and suddenly Netanyahu bad a long list of new things the Palestinians must immediately do to protect Israelis.

He's right, of course, in making high security demands on the Palestinians. His core demand here is right too: The Palestinians cannot be allowed to use security cooperation as a lever to induce Israeli bargaining concessions. The Egyptian and Jordanian leaders - as a close Netanyahu aide, Dore Gold, put it to me last week did oot let violence hover over the negotiating table. Nor should Yasser Arafat.

But it is wildly self-delusional, if it is oot just plain cynical, for Israelis to imagine that their own poliocal behavior has no effect on the Palestinian Authority's readiness to restrain both officially condoned and informally generated terrorism.

True, it also is delusional to think that even the fairest and most enlightcoed Israeli policy would lift from the Israelis the full curse of Palestinian terrorism. This awful pheoomenon has sources beyond the normal political reach. As it is now, the Israeli position on terrorism involves an all-out and, if necessary, lonely struggle in which all tactics are jusofied.

The policy looks figally to be coming down hard on Arafat and other offenders in order to demonstrate that Palestinian depredations have a cost.

Those who do not have to go about every day wondering if their fellow bus passenger is a suicide bomber bave an obligaoon of empathy; Israelis monitor it closely. But an obligation of empathy also runs to Palestinians striving for a political objective a state - that is considered reasonable and normal in most parts of the world.

How virtual pyramids might save the real ones

By DOUGLAS JEHL

The Jerusalem Post Wednesday, August 20, 1997

the grandeur of the Great Pyramids of Giza may be best appreciated from afar from across the desert, perhaps on borseback.

But to those drawn also hy the labyrinthine mysteries within, there is bad news: One by one, their cramped passageways are being closed, at least temporarily, to tourists.

The latest of the pyramids to be shut is Mycerinus (also known as Menkaure), the third and smallest of the behemoths on the outskirts of Cairo. Archeologists had discovered that the moisture exhaled by the mounting number of tourists exploring the poorly ven-tilated chambers had raised humidity to dangerous levels, causing crystallized salt to line the walls and beginning to blacken them with fungi.

The danger, according to Zahi Hawass, the director of the pyramids and one who would prefer that they all be closed to tourists permanently, is that the salt can begin to crack and irrevocably weaken the 4,500-year-old structures, which are among the oldest surviving man-made constructions.

"There is an ancicot Egyptian saying that 'Man fears time, and time fears the pyramids,' hut this is no longer true," Hawass said. "The pyramids must fear time, too.'

For at least the next year, Hawass said, workers will replace worn-out portions of the interior walls with a limestone material. and a ventilation system may be constructed to help withdraw the air that otherwise accumulates in dangerous quantities.

The Mycerinus pyramid has no ventilation system of its own, and archeologists believe it may be more greatly damaged than either of the other two Great Pyramids that share the Giza plateau. The repairs are estimated to cost thousands of dollars, almost all of it to come from visitor fees, which bave climbed to about $7 a person in recent years to help pay for the refurbishment.

MYCERINUS PYRAMID, more than 65 meters tall, first opened to the public in 1882. This is the first time it has been closed since; two other Great Pyramids have been closed in succession to visitors. Five years ago, the largest pyramid, known as Cheops or K, was closed for nearly a year for similar renovations, and beginning last Angust, the second-largest pyra-mid, Chephren, was closed for oearly a year, and did oot reopen until late spring.

Other nearby pyramids, smaller but in their own way just as dramatic, remain open to visitors, including the step pyramids of Saqqara and the newly opened pyramids in Dashour. And in October, the Great Sphinx of Giza will be stripped of the scaffolding that has covered it during renovations that have lasted for a decade.

As many as 5,000 visitors a day to Egypt swelled to a record of by the year 2000, and there are three million last year. As construction of hotels on the Red Sea and in Cairo proceeds nonstop, the Ministry of Tourism has spoken of come to the pyramids on the Giza ambitious plans to hring as many new Imax film featuring dramatic plateau, and the number of visitors as eight million visitors to Egypt those who believe that more drastic steps toward preservation may be needed.

FEATURES

Hawass, for one, bopes that a interior shots of the pyramids and other pharaonic sites may provide the curious with a virtual experience that could substitute for the real thing. The film, starring Omar Sharif, will probably open in theaters around the world sometime next spring.

Hawass is also leading a cam-paign to ban horses and camels from the plateau on grounds that they add to pollution and are unsightly. Inside the grand structures, visitors have used the burial chambers as lavatories, filling some with an unbearable stench And along with the relics of early archeologists, the less fascinating detritus of new visitors can be found: eigarette butts, graffiti, even condom wrappers.

During the cleaning itself, water is unlikely to be used; archeologists are fearful that any further increase in bomidity could cause more damage. And though the elosing bas been officially announced as likely to last just six months, Hawass said that at least a year will be required to repair the damage.

Hawass is currently resigned to a system that will elose the pyramids in succession, and in the meantime will install a new electrical system and interior lights to belp visitors appreciate them more fully. But in the long term, he wishes that people would do more to savor the sacred chambers from afar.

"The magic of the pyramids is from the outside, not the inside," Hawass said.

Rallying at death row's door

Italians find an unlikely martyr in a convicted American murderer

By RICHARD BOUDREAUX

ROME (LA Times) - Next to a medieval convent in Palermo, where Sicilians have buried princes. Mafia bosses, crime victims and other loved ones for six centuries, lies their newest and unlikeliest celebrity.

The inscription on his tombstone, covered each day with fresh flowers, reads: "Joseph R. O'Dell III, beloved husband of Lori Urs O'Dell, honorary citizen of Palermo, killed by Virginia, USA, in a merciless and brutal iustice system."

A convicted murderer and rapist with no ties to Italy, O'Dell reached from death row to the World Wide Web to rally much of this country in a plea for his life. His execution last month, which kept mittions of television viewers here up all night, made him the unofficial martyr of Italy's campaign against capital punishment in the rest of the world.

How a drifter with 14 felony convictions in the US ended up with a VIP funeral in a foreign land - which flew his body over by chartered jet - is a story of international politics and Italian idiosyncrasy, of crusaders and manipulators on both sides of the Atlantic. It is a tale of instant fame in Italy that gave O'Dell belated notice in the US and encouraged American death-penalty foes to look abroad for new ways to lobby against executions at home. Sometimes we need a satellite dish out there reflecting on us an image of who we are," said Sister Helen Prejean, the author of "Dead Man Walking," who took up O'Dell's cause. "The Italians gave us that Viewed from Europe, Mexico, Australia or South Africa, the 38 US states that allow the death penalty are growing targets of curiosity and condemnation. Journalists from those places cover death-row cases, struggling to explain why America retains a punishment abandoned by their countries and nearly all Western democracies.

Two summers ago, the scheduled execution of Mumia Abu-Jamal, a black writer and onetime political activist convicted of killing a white Philadelphia policeman, ignited more clemency appeals and street protests in Europe than in the US. Abu-Jamal won a reprieve to appeal the sentence.

Pope John Paut II's near-categorical opposition to the death penalty in a 1995 encyclical has brightened the spotlight. The pope has pleaded since for the lives of 13 Americans on death row, mcluding O'Dell's, speaking ont in every case brought to bis attention, says spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls.

O'Dell's celebrity in Italy may be a sign of pressures to come. His 11-year battle to get off death row scarcely was known outside Virginia until Italians noticed it last fall. A more sympathetic jury would be hard to find. Revulsed by Benito Mussolini's liberal use of UN Human Rights Commission, the death penalty, Italy abolished it shortly after the fascist dictator's own execution at the end of World War II. Politicians across the spectrum have backed that decision ever since, even during Italy's bloody bout with Red Brigade terrorists two decades ago.

Influenced by Roman Catholic teachings about redemption, ordinary Italians usually share the view that capital punishment is useless and cruel - although they are known to waver when pollsters come around after a sensational murder close to bome. Italians are given to bursts of outrage over death-row cases abroad. After street demonstrations in Rome last year, the Constitutional Court blocked extradition of a fugitive Italian citizen to Florida, where he could have faced capital punishment in the death of a tax agent. But not since Massachusetts electrocuted the Italian immigrant anarchists Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti in 1927 - for a murder they were later cleared in - have Italians mobilized so forcefully for a condemned foreigner as they did for O'Dell. Of all the 3,000 or so Americans on death row, why him? For one reason, Italy's political climate was favorable. A center-left government had come to power in mid-1996 and launched a diplomatic crusade against capital punishment worldwide - one that was to win unprecedented support from the over US objections, in April.

"We saw that while the number of death-penalty nations was diminishing, the number of executions was increasing, especially in the US, China and Seudi Árabia," said Luciano Neri, coordinator of an abolitionist group in the Italian Parliament. "We were ready for a campaign. O'Dell gave us a name and a face.

Another reason was O'Dell's savvy and tenacious advocate, a Boston law student named Lori Urs. Urs, who married O'Dell on his last day alive, had been working with lawyers trying to overturn his conviction for the 1985 mmder of Helen Schartner, a secretary who was pistol-whipped, raped, sodomized and strangled after leaving a Virginia Beach tavern. The law student had created a

Web page to publicize O'Dell's defense: The recanted testimony of a key witness bad thrown his conviction into doubt; bis lawyers argued that newer, more sophisticated DNA tests could prove him innocent; a procedural error during the trial should have disqualified the death sentence. Ignored for three years by most American media, Urs placed calls last October to several European newspapers. Alessandra Farkas, the New York correspondent of Milan's influential Corriere della Sera, was the first to call back. Farkas read the Web page and interviewed O'Dell by phone.

Not convinced of his innocence. she wanted to dig deeper, but her edilors demanded something quick and categorical, she recalls. Her article stated flatly that a convict was going to be executed "for a crime he didn't commit.

Farkas had published sympathetic interviews with other Americans on death row without causing much stir. She was amazed by the uproar over this Neri read her article and quickly located Urs. The two plotted a lobbying blitz that brought ciemency appeals from the pope, Italian President Oscar Luigi Scalfaro, the Italian Parliament, the European Parliament and 1,500 civic groups across Italy. Italian Prime Minister Romano Prodi raised the O'Dell case when he met with President Clinton in June.

Some city halls set up Internet sites so Italians could send their own appeals to Virginia Gov. George Allen. His aides counted 10,000 letters, calls and computer messages about O'Dell, 95 percent of them from Italy.

Italian journalists competed fiercely for exclusives. Those proclaiming his innocence were rewarded with calls from O'Dell on their cellular phones. His strong, articulate voice was on the airwaves for weeks, unchallenged by any view from prosecutors or the murder victim's family.

Washington Post) - Even as he targeted congressional waste with his new line-item veto last week, President Clinton has been forced to use more old-fashioned executive powers to throttle back on the jel-setting travel expenses of his own White House staff.

As a result of a new crackdown, fewer aides are allowed to accompany Clinton on Air Force One these days on his many jaunts around the country. Other aides have not been sent to out-of-town conferences, and the advance teams that handle the logistics of presidential visits have to cope with smaller staffs and less time on the ground.

The restrictions were imposed last spring when it became evident that the White House was perilously close to exhausting ita $814,000 annual staff travel budget by the end of the fiscal year on Sept. 30 without any cushion for the unexpected.

"We just decided we were going to tighten our belt and make sure we had enough to do everything we wanted to do," said deputy chief of staff John D. Podesta, who instituted the limits. Podesta said the White House had enough cash to pay for planned trips. The president, bowever, is often called upon for unanticipated, last-minute excursions, such as visiting disaster scenes and, as Podesta put it. "you can't put it on your credit card."

The White House exceeded its staff travel budget once during Clinton's first term and was forced to return to Congress for permission to handle the shortfall, an experience that no one in the West Wing is eager to repeat.

As it was, some Republicans took the news of the travel budget woes, first reported in US News & World Report, as another indication of a White House beset with financial problems.

"This is not inconsistent with the way they spend money on other things at the White House," said Ron Foreman, a spokesman for Rep. Jini Kolbe (Republican, Arizona), who heads a House ing new restrictions on White House spending on political activities.

According to White House press secretary Michael McCurry, Clinton and first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton have been among those concerned about the ballooning cniourages that follow them around the country.

McCurry attributed the sizable traveling parties to 'bracket creep and people taking seriously the inflated titles that they ve been given."

The occount under scrutiny pays for the travel, food and lodging of the policy advisers, advance aides and spokesmen who travel around the country. But it does not include overseas trips, the operating costs of Air Force One or the expenses of support personnel such as physicians and Secret Service agents. Podesta said the squeeze has produced $30,000 to $40,000 in "headroom" not including money set aside for trips such as the Clintons' three-week Martha's Vineyard vacation which starts this weekend and his trip to California next month to drop off his daughter at Stanford University.

Among other things, the White House sent fewer officials to the National Governors' Association meeting in Las Vegas and has asked advance teams to depart a day later. stagger arrivals or make do with one person less. Fewer than 10 aides will accompany the Clintons on vacation.

Podesta was aided in his efforts by Clinton's decisions not to go last weekend to Block Island in Rhode Island for some golfing and an environmental event, or to Yellowstone National Park this coming weekend to celebrate its 125th anniversary. But he denied that either was influenced by nioney. A $40,000 cushion, he said, would be enough to pay for roughly three one-day trips not currently on the schedule.

in explaining how the account briefly got out of control, he said. "You know, people like to travel."

FAMILY MATTERS

Love knows no age

Even when the bloom is supposedly off the rose, love springs eternal. Experts agree that there is no age limit on love and sex, Bettijane Levine reports

It was a day like any other when Florence Courts meandered into a furniture store.

Then, bam! It hit her. "Like a lightning bolt. A thunder jolt. It literally threw me off my feet and I had to sit down," she says of meeting heartthrob Art Sherman. He's the tall, athletic, fun-loving guy who sold her four chairs and etched himself indelibly in her heart. They stayed in touch. Sixteen years later, after Art's wife died, he and Florence began to date. "It's been a wild, passionate roller-coaster ride ever since," Florence reports. "Together we just click," says Art. "We're possibly the two happiest people on Earth." On June 9, they celebrated their first wedding anniversary. She's 81; he's 79. Do old people have sex?

Do they experience real romantic love?

Do they feel the same yearnings, churnings, giddy desire, agonizing intensity - and the same screne fulfillment when they find the perfect mate - that we osually think of as the exclusive province of the young?

The answer is yes, yes, yes, to all the above.

What's more, these questions are being asked with greater frequency as people live longer, divorce later, and become widows and widowers at advanced ages but are often still in good health. They are alone on life's road once again ... and looking for love.

And that's wby more families of old people are noticing --- often with some embarrassment --- that Grandma or Grandpa is acting oddly adolescent these days: Wonying if the phone will ring. Wondering what to wear on a date. Speoding bours with friends to plan romantic strategies. And sometimes (horrors!) staying out all night. Ceilular phones are the latest rage for oldsters who don't want their children to know they're not sleeping at home, gerontologists are in," says Rntgers University anthropologist Helen Fisher, author of The Anatomy of Love (W.W. Norton & Co., 1992). And as the hoge baby boomer generation gets older, we'll be hearing much more about all this, Fisher says: "Uotil oow, our culture defined old people as sexually and romantically dead. We were wrong," Harold Goodman and Marj Lintz were married 44 years - to other people.

Each had enjoyed life's bounty, and neither expected much more. Then, widower Harold went bowling and met widow Marj.

"She was it," he says emphatically. "I was overwhelmed by she recalls. By the second him,* date, they knew that this was something "different and special." Very shortly thereafter, they knew that this was love.

"You cannot call it companionship. Or friendship. We would never have moved in together for that," Marj says. "No, indeed." says Harold, try-ing hard to explain the depth of their union, and succeeding with three little words: "We are one." If they had met earlier in life, they say, they would have probably married each other instead of the spouses they chose. "We were each happily married," Marj explains, "but not like this. For this ... there are no words."

They have lived and loved for the past nine years in a pristine, light-filled cottage in Los Angeles from which they sally forth to dine, dance, bowl, golf, act in commercials (he was a retired insurance agency owner when "discovered" as an actor at age 72). Now, they're "the Miller Lite couple," advertising beer in a striking TV commercial, by groping each other while rolling around on a sofa, teen-age style. Harold is 92. Marjorie is 80.

What they really advertise best is their ardor's agelessness. The dynamic of elder love is oot very different from that of any other kind of love, experts say.

Only two factors mitigate against it the absence of suitable partners (there are many more older women than men) and severe illness (with advanced age, physical problems tend to crop up). But if a person remains relatively healthy and is lucky enough to find a mate, then it's business as usual. doctors and social scientists say.

"People remain sensual and sexual until they die. There is no age at which it ends," says Dr. Loren Lipson, head of the geriatric division at University of Southern California School of Medicine. "When you are 85 and fall for someone, you act goofy and gaga and hold hands and do the same romantic things you might have done 65 years before. Younger copic und to think that's yucko," Lipson says. "Old people are supposed to be over the bill in that regard. Of course, they are anything but."

The sexual yearnings of an older person are oot met just by sex itself, he says, "but by holding, touching and communicating the same as it is supposed to be for younger people. Too many young people think 'the act' is all there is to sex," he says.

Dr. Gary Small, a psychiatrist and director of UCLA's Center on Aging, says: "What we now know shatters all the standard myths: that older people don't experience passion, have no interest in sex, or that the norm is to become feebleminded or get Alzheimer's disease. Gerontologists bave studied all this." Only five percent of the population above age 65 gets Alzheimer's.

Above age 80, the percentage rises, he adds. "But as long as someone is in reasonable health." romance and all that goes with it is an option few would refuse, oo matter how old they are, he says. "Older people do feel desire ... and they are able to satisfy it."

Anthropologist Fisher explains that womeo's sex drive tends to peak in their late 20s or early 30s, and then remains the same in most women after menopause as before. Men's sex drive is highest in their early 20s "and then goes slowly down until somewhere in middle age, when the sex drive in men and women becomes quite equalized," she says. This creates perfect path, she says, for satisfying late-life love.

Anthropologist Fisher says there's no surprise about this, once you understand bow love operates. Now writing a book about romantic love in the 21st century, Fisher says the thunderbolt of emotion "can hit you at any age. And the essential elements of it never change." She is studyiog the physiology of romantic love and believes that although men and women both experience some lessening of sexual prowess and physical satisfaction as they age, they seem to experience "much greater emotional satisfactioo from their sexual activity." They enjoy more foreplay, tendemess, intimacy

Can they enjoy sex? "In some ways, they will enjoy it more than ever before; in other ways, not as much," says Fisher. She believes the brain is "deeply wired with circuitry" for basic mating emotions that have been in place over millions of years. Lust: "A tremendous thirst and craving for sexual gratification that lasts through old age."

Romance: "The exhilaratioo, cuphoria, intrusive thinking, the sleeplessness and loss of appetite. The big craving for emotional union. This is governed by a different circuitry and a different set of chemicals.

Gussie and Clyde

Attachment: "That's the sense of calm, peace and serenity that people find with a particular partner, and that can happen at any age."

Nothing changes about this physiology as we get older, Fisher maintains. What has changed is the times. As people live longer and remain healthier, a lot more elderly are in "a perfect position to go out there and have a wild, emotional, teeo-age romance." The truth is, it never ends. The yearning, the churning, the biological urges and the passion for romance that used to be thought of as characteristic of youth. Fisher tells the story of one elderly man who "escaped" from an old-age home on a bicycle and rode 100 miles to a place where the senior set meet every winter in Arizona. "This guy pulled in on his bike, met a neat woman, and for the last two years they've been traveling the country in her RV, having a wonderful love affair." (AP)

PARENTING

Massaging your infant or baby can be one of the most rewarding, relaxing activities you can do with your child.

Vussie and Clyde Latham of Spur, Texas, know all about late-life love. They've been married three years. He's 87; she's 84.

But Clyde's 53-year-old son, New York-based writer Aaron Latham, was not prepared for his father's late-life love.

"It was totally unanticipated" and at first seemed "a bit bizarre," Aaron Latham says.

Only a few years before, the son had spent weeks with his father in his dying mother's bospital room, trying to ease his dad's profound despair, wondering how the older man would survive the death of the woman he had loved so deeply for so many years. Indeed, his father seemed to fall apart after his mother's death, which spurred the son to start calling Texas every night from New York, to see bow his dad was doing. Soon, he couldn't get through.

Clyde was on the phone with Gussie, a woman who'd moved from Spur to Sacramento, Calif., 70 years before. A woman Clyde hadn't laid eyes oo in more than 50 years. A woman whose husband had died at about the same time as his own beloved wife.

And a woman for whom, it seems, Clyde bad nursed a secret soft spot since be was a teen-ager. . After months of phone calls, Gussie promised to visit Clyde in Texas. Then she canceled. Then she promised and canceled again. And again. And again.

Each cancellation scot Clyde, a retired high school football coach, into deeper depression, it seemed to his son from afar. He started disliking this woman for hurting his dad, even though he didn'i know ber.

Gussie's family was equally protective. At first, ber married daughter wanted to travel with her. That plan was scrapped, and the nervous Gussie decided to brave it alone.

After many aborted attempts, she finally made the trip with only four changes of clothes. This was to be her graceful way out, she later explained. When she'd wom each outfit once, there would be nothing left to wear and she'd have the perfect excuse to go bome. As it turned out, Gussie and Clyde were like powerful magnets that, once connected, could not easily be pried apart. They couldn't take their eyes off each other. Couldn't stop chattering to each other. Didn't endure a dull moment in that two-horse town. Or find a dark cloud in that huge West Texas sky, no maner bow bad the weather was.

The day Gussie left, Clyde was desolate again. He got his daughter-in-law, Lesley Stahl (of 60 Minutes fame), on the phone."

"Would Aaron be upset if I got married again?" he asked, She didn't think so, she said.

So Clyde packed a bag, flew to Sacramento, asked for Gussie's hand and called New York to say they were going to elope.

The younger Latham, aghast at the speediness of it all, asked, "Do you really know this woman? Don't you think you should slow down?"

"I'm in my 80s; I don't have time to slow down," Clyde replied.

Soon the younger Latham flew to Texas to visit the newlyweds. He found them sleeping side by side in their twin reclining chairs, holding hands.

The Ballad of Gussie & Clyde (Villard) is Aaron Latham's just-published literary tribute to the tender beauty of his father's newfound love. (AP)

Communicating through massage

By RUTH MASON

The Indians (from India) have been doing it for ceoturies. During the past few decades, Americans have begun to catch on.

Massaging your infant or baby can be one of the most rewarding, relaxing activities you can share with your child. You don't have to be a professiooal masseuse to massage your baby. Some hospitals and private instructors offer courses oo infant massage, which can be fuo and worthwhile. There are also many books on the market that give step-by-step instructions.

The president did not say how he intends to carry out his plans for economic reforms. The Iranian economy has long suffered from runaway inflation and low growth. The government said annual inflation rose 25 percent last year. Independent economists say the figure is much higher.

In bls speech to deputies, Khatami said most state-run companies are operating at a loss. The government controls heavy industries, such as oil and gas, car and truck makers. All banks and financial institutions were brought under state control after the 1979 Islamic Revolution, which toppled the Shah and installed the present clerical leadership.

Analysts say Iranian officials are reluctant to foster social unrest by cutting food and energy subsidies worth at least $10 billion a year. Khatami told the Majlis that his 22-member cabinet had the tacit approval of supreme leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, wbo enjoya sweeping religious and political powers.

Deputies in the 266-seat assembly will debate the qualifications of the ministers today and cast their votes tomorrow.

A lack of available land means that both developers and industrialists have to cooperate, Nitzan said.

"What should we do, not build more bousing?" he asked. "We have to build neighborhoods in such a way that their will be a balance between housing and industry." The Har Hotzvim park employs 3,500 and exports goods worth $720 million annually. Last year, $101m. was invested in the park.

is experiencing a bit of a tough Ltime. After a very strong run, several major foreign markets have switched over to profit-taking, minor corrections - call it what you like. Naturally, each market has its own reasons. The fear of an interest-rate rise in Germany bothered European investors; the fear of faster economic growth and the possibility of higher rates spooked the US markets.

Locally, some of the nervousness was a result of similar concems over an interest-rate hike combined with fears over the budget battles currently being waged. Weakness in Teva, the market's bellwether, has not helped, dragging down the main indices. The market may also have been suffering from a bout of indigestion after digging in with such relish to one new issue after another. As prices rose and quality fell, some investors have begun to feel that enough was enough. The spate of new issues has been very interesting. Most bave been convertible bonds with warrants attached. Many of the issuers have been real-estate companies.

Companies typically issue con-vertible bonds because they believe their stock is too cheap and do not want to suffer the dilution a stock issue would inflict. The convertible/warrant package is attractive to investors because it theoretically confers a degree of downside protection - the bondbolders rank ahead of ordinary shareholders, and if the shares do not perform well enough to warrant conversion, the bondholders will get their money back. If the shares perform well, on the other hand, it is worth converting the bonds and taking a nice profit. The warrants represent the cherry oo top.

The market sniffed the supposedly renewed attractions of the convertible bond/warrant package and piled in, bidding prices up to a level such that it was costing good issuers very little in interest to raise money.

My bunch is that a new round of suckers are oow being taken. As a case in point, Ha'aretz last week quoted a manager at a prominent underwriter in the coosortiom, managing the unit offering for Zeller Eblagon (a leasing and financial services company) as saying: "We knew it was a junk offering when we signed off on the prospectus, but given the com-

Zeller Eblagon raised large amounts of money on the TASE in the last bull market, has had spotty profits, has been involved in numerous questionable transactions with related parties and has raised the current funds primarily to buy a 24.6% stake in Zeller Eblagon Leasing, another relatedparty transaction. When asked whether this didn't cause him a An underwriter for the quality of a company (for which he raises money), only to make sure there is full disclosure in the prospectus. My job as an underwriter is to make sure the offering gets away.

Another member of the underwriting syndicate said: "I don't know why they bought these securities, but the fact is that there were buyers."

American underwriters would certainly disagree with this approach. In any offering they have two clients - the buyer and the seller - and if they burn the former too often v offerings, they w

NEW YORK (Reuters) - Stocks ended sharply higher yesterday, as the Federal Reserve's decision to keep interest rates unchanged added more spark to the market's fiery recovery from last Friday's plunge. Based on early and unofficial data, the Dow Jooes industrial average was up 114.74 points, or 1.47 percent, at 7,918.10 after storming 109 points higher on Monday on the back of Friday's 247-point loss. The Nasdaq composite index jumped 31.19 points, or nearly 2%, at 1,600.71 on the strength of technology stocks.

In the broader market, advancing issues swamped declines 20-8 on heavy volume of 547 million shares on the New York Stock Exchange. The stock surge masked some stormy volatility. The Dow bad earlier scored gains of more than 100 poiots but whipsawed lower in the min-utes following the Fed's announcement, losing 75 points, before heading sharply higher again.

David Justice hit a three-run homer, his fifth in a week, and Orel Hershiser pitched Cleveland to its fifth win in six games.

Justice batted .513 as the firstplace Indians went 7-5 on a homestand that got off to an ominous 1-3 start last week, sparking talk of the Indians' demise in the AL Central and the future of manager Mike Hargrove. The Indians went 5-1 after a 13-3 loss in the first game of a doubleheader against the Tigers last Wednesday.

Justice, who had 15 RBIs on the homestand, put Cleveland up 3-0 with his 24th homer in the first off Woody Williams (7-11). He led off the sixth with a dou-

PSG penalized for European Cup mistake

PARIS, Aug 18 (Reuters) -Paris St Germain's European Cup campaign suffered a major setback on Monday when UEFA penalized them two goals for fielding a suspended player against Steaua Bucharest in a preliminary round first leg match.

A PSG spokesman said that UEFA had altered the club's 3-2 defeat in Bucharest last week to a 3-0 loss after ruling that defender Laurent Fournier was ineligible. Fournier, who played the whole match, should not have been on the pitch because of his bookings from last season.

"We forgot about the suspension of Laurent Fournier," PSG's sporting director Claude Le Roy said, calling the blunder a "catastrophe" for the club.

"We're completely crushed by this," he said. "There's great sadness and incredulity at PSG today." "Statistically there are not such great chances for qualification after losing a first leg 3-0 defeat."

The punishment meant that PSG, French league runners-ups, will have to score at least three goals in the return match in Paris on August 27 to have a hope of progressing to extra time and a penalty shoot-out.

Steaua coach Mihai Stoichita was also concerned about the effect of the decision on the PSG players.

"I'm really afraid now when I think of the second leg in Paris," he said. "I fear that they might stop at nothing in order to beat the 3-0 odds."

The Red Sox begin a nine-game the Red Sox visit Anaheim Friday night

"I'm just looking forward to getting out there, and I don't care what the situation is," said the two-time Cy Young Award winner. "The rest of the year is more of a learning process, but I am not out there to get by. I'm out there to dominate.

Saberhagen moves into the rotation, and Gordon will gradually move toward the closer's role. Both Gordon and manager Jimy Williams are in favor of the move. next year."

"I think a lot of good things will come out of it, and the timing is right," Gordon said. "The first couple of years, they were talking about it, but it was never going to happen with a guy like Jeff Montgomery there. "I always wanted to do it, and am looking forward to getting the chance."

The Red Sox are a game ahead of last year's pace. They were 13 games under .500 at the All-Star break in 1996, but went on a lateseason run to finish with an $5-77 record.

"It's better this way than to heat up early and finish up cold," said catcher Scott Hatteberg. "This is a team that's never given up, and we want to get to .500 so that we can have something to build on for

Sydney psyched for 2000 Games

SYDNEY (Reuters) - Sydneysiders are as keen as ever on the Olympics, with a survey released yesterday showing that almost three out of four of the city's residents plan to attend the 2000 Games. The Australia-wide poll of 1,500 people also found that about onethird of people living outside the New South Wales state capital would like to travel to Sydney to see the Olympics first hand.

The survey found 73 percent of Sydney residents want to watch the Games in person and 31 percent of non-Sydney respondents said they would travel to Australia's largest city to watch events.

"We're delighted that one in three Australians want to be here," John Moore, marketing director for Games organisers SOCOG, told reporters.

Interest in attending the Games was higher among males than females, while overcrowding was the most common reason given by people who said they would stay away.

The influx of out-of-town visitors was unlikely to provide a major boost for hotels, however, as the survey found only 15% of non-Sydney respondents planned to stay in hotels.

Most said they would stay with relatives or friends. Over 40% of Sydney respondents said they expected to host friends or relatives during the Games between September 15 and October 1, 2000.

Kite cites US Ryder Cup team's inexperience

MAMARONECK, NY - It played once each. began raining Monday morning and, somewhere in a sea of umbrellas, Tom Kite wore a worried look.

Later, he stood at a news conference al Winged Foot, where he announced Fred Couples and Lee Janzen as his captain's choices for the US Ryder Cup team, then received congratulations from several of the PGA of America officials who were in the room. More than one of them wished him good luck.

"I'll need it," Kite said. Maybe so. The 12-player squad that Kite will take to Valderrama, Spain, next month to play Europe isn't only young. It's also inexperienced.

The only thing that kept Kite's lasses from fogging up is that the JS contingent also is talented.

What isn't known is how this team, however many flagsticks it is capable of knocking down, will perform on the pressurized, worldwide stage that is Ryder Cup play. "I love this team," said Kite, who indicated that his squad would be the underdog.

"The European players know Valderrama (site of the annual Volvo Masters) like the backs of their hands. So we are behind the eight-hall there. But this is an impressive list of names."

Couples and Janzen complete a US team composed of Masters champion Tiger Woods, British Open champion Justin Leonard, PGA champion Davis Love III, Tom Lebman, Jim Furyk, Phil Mickelson, Jeff Maggert, Mark O'Meara, Scott Hoch and Brad Faxon.

By selecting veterans Couples and Janzen, Kite tried to balance the relative inexperience of the players who made the team on points earned this year on the tour. Couples has played on the last four Ryder Cup teams and was a captain's pick of Lanny Wadkios in 1995.

Janzen played on the 1993 team.

a level with Couples. "When Freddie is good, in my opinion, he's as good as we've got," Kite said. I guess the thing in my mind is when Freddie wants to play, be's the best.

Kite said Couples' talent outweighed such considerations as his back problems, his seriously ill father and the health problems of his companion, Thais Bren.

"The Ryder Cup for me, I've bad some ups and downs, but it's always a dramatic week," Couples said. "So it's made a relatively long year coming in and I hope to be ready to play my best.

"I have been playing some fair golf, but not great. I think I can tum that around very quickly."

Janzen, who was the 36-hole leader at the PGA here, played with Kite on the last day and shot a 69, finishing in fourth place by one shot over Kite, who had a 70. Janzen might bave played himself onto the team Sunday, Kite

"He helped his cause," Kite said. "I don't know how difficult it was for him, playing with me, knowing that I'm watching every shot, but he handled that situation well. If he can handle the Europeans the same way that he did that situation yesterday, we'll do OK."

Kite said that besides Maggert, who clinched a berth on the team Sunday when he shot 65 and finished third, Janzen was the only other potential captain's pick who proved himself at the PGA.

"I was waiting for somebody to show me something," he said. "I just needed somebody to not tell me in words they wanted to make the team, but tell in with shots they wanted to make the team. And Lee did that."

Olympic champion faces disciplinary action

SEVILLE (Reuters) - Ireland's triple Olympic champion Michelle de Brain was in trouble with officials after her European women's 400 meters individual medley victory yesterday.

De Brain, whose Atlanta titles were won under her maiden name of Michelle Smith, risked the ultimate punishment of disqualification from the championships for missing the initidatory post-race press conference, European Swimming League president Bartolo Coasolo said.

After a few brief comments to Irish television, the swimmer went straight to doping control and then left the arena.

We will investigate the situation," Consolo said. "We have rules that say that she should attend a press conference and if she doesn't then she might be disqualified from the rest of the competition.

A sense of closure

an emblem of the potent US movement to grant greater rights to crime's victims and survivors.

Victims can offer written statements at sentencings in all 50 states and can speak at the hearing in at least 46.

California last month became the latest to give victims' relatives the right to attend the killer's execution. The sponsor, state Assemblyman Tom McClintock, said the law gives victims' families the same rights accorded relatives of the condemned - and a means to closure.

To be sure, there are other powerful forces at work besides closure concerns in these changes, includiog national worry over crime and efforts to toughen laws. But courthouse concern for closure comes as the legal system increasingly considers crime's toll on victims and their own need for a day in court. Tioged in equal parts with ideas of healing and redemption, the o Bulgaria search for closure io the courts melds the modern tenets of pop psychology with ancient notions

"It's in the Zeitgeist of the culture. I'm seeing it all over the place," said Ellen McGrath, a New York-hased psychotherapist and commentator on psychology trends. "For lack of a better word, I'll call it a movement."

Never before has closure been so much on the public's lips catching hold as Americans increasingly look to the realm of mental health for help in coping with profound tragedies or everyday family life. The emphasis on closure shows the pervasiveness of therapy-speak during an era in which a claim to feel our pain is a presidential trademark and even Joe Six Pack is conversant in lingo like "codependent" and "denial." Some observers say the closure crusade reveals a society eager for neat endings amid a string of highprofile tragedies, twists in the economy and technology, and even shifting rules over morality. It is an impulse, they say, for control in a changing world. There is a feeling of a need for limits. When there is a need for limits, there is a need for a moral world - that wrongs will be righted," said Herbert Morris, professor emeritus of philosophy and law at the University of California, Los Angeles. "If you don't have closure, yoo're living in an unsteady state."

the Oklahoma City bombing trial revolved heavily around whether slapped tritely on any number of the death penalty would bring clo-sure to the families of the victims. Reactions to the civil judgment against O.J. Simpson were peppered with closure references. of US history. So prevalent has such conversation become that it has sparked a backlash among some cartoonists and writers as touchy-feely gibberish.

A recent New Yorker cartoon labeled "Closure" depicts Little Red Riding Hood in a moment of hand-holding reconciliation with the wolf, who ate the girl'a grandmother.

"We're talking about the national habit of turning every trauma into group therapy," scoffed scoffed Atlanta colomnist Michael Skube in a piece attacking what he called "adult slang."

Some mental health experts cringe at the loose asage and worry that society's expectations about closure might backfire on victims who can't reach tidy con-

Americans' conversation over clusions. A concept as amorphous as closure runs the risk of being emotional events - be it an anniversary, funeral or a charged courroom confrontation.

Glib calls for closure often carry "a judgmental tinge" that a person's grieving should be over, said David Foy, a psychology professor at Pepperdine University in California and trauma expert.

But there may be more to closure than an overworked cliche. Some view it as a sign of how the country shares the hurt produced by its tragedies - from bombings to plane crashes to murder trials - and longs to mark an end to the communal angst.

"There have been public trauma events that have impacted the natioo - whether it's O.J., [who was] a public hero, or the Oklahoma City bomhing," said Linda Dunlap, who heads the psy-chology department at Marist College in Poughkeepsie, N.Y. "The society itself wants to put closure in place."

Dunlap sees benefits in the closure trend. It has focused society's concern on the needs of victims and survivors as well as oo the process through which people recover from loss, she said.

But what is closure? "You're going to get a lot of defi-nitions," said Michael de Arellano, a researcher at the National Crime Victims Research and Treatment Center in South Carolina. "It's not real clear."

Meanings differ even among specialists. Closure can encompass widely varying concepts. It refers to the last step of therapy and is a common theme in literature and film, describing the way a work ends.

Most often, it means acceptance or resolution - to go on living by putting a tragedy in its place.

Louis Jolyon West, a UCLA psychiatry professor who interviewed survivors of the Oklahoma City bomhing, calls closure "a final understanding" or "an emotional satisfaction that one has pursued a puzzling conflict to the end."

But experts say the route is a highly personal one that defies mapping by others. Acceptance can take longer than erecting a memorial or completing a criminal trial. This can spell extra hurdens for victims; although sociely and the media may be ready to declare a chapter closed, it seldom works that way.

West said the effects of emotional wounds linger like physical ones: "After you've been wounded, you can heal up, but it's still a scar. It still aches when it rains." One grief specialist slopped taking reporters' calls about public tragedies because he got sick of advising people to forget about finding closure. The researcher, George A. Bonanno, said victims are better off putting a tragedy out of their minds than constantly mulling it to reach understanding. "People don't get closure. It's kind of a mythical thing," said Bonanno, assistant professor at Catholic University in Washington, D.C.

In no way is the closure trend limited to disasters. It can be seen in more modest forms in everyday life: a woman's search for the recipient of her brother's donated heart, the reunion of war protesters, Closure is a staple of news coverage of tragedies and often the push behind how people cope with mhappy events. The first anniver-sary of the 1994 Los Angeles earthquake included a public celebration for "healing and closure." Survivors of the Oklahoma City bombing cited closure - a need to understand the unfathomable - in poshing for a memorial.

Other times, closure is meant for a more private ache. In the name of closure, a Los Angeles funeral home held a public memorial for all who lost loved ones last year.

The ers from asbestos all but eliminated use of the hazardous mineral. The asbestos litigatioo was not a shining moment for the civil justice system. Studies by the Rand Corp.'s Institute for Social Justice found that only about 38 cents of every dollar spent on the lawsuits went to compensate victinia. Fees to defense and plaintiffs lawyers and other litigation costs absorbed the rest. Still, the private lawsuits, not government bans, caused the dramatic reductioo in asbestos use. Plaintiffs attorneys shouldn't get full credit - or blame - for the tobacco deal. Attorneys-general provided leadership, support and cover. Moreover, the litigation drew momentum from events in Washington - including the FDA's investigation of nicotine and explosive hearings in 1994 chaired by Rep. Henry A. Waxman (D-CA.) to be paid to anti-tobacco lawyers, which are sure to smash all records.

Eager to get Congress and the public behind the deal, negotiators figured the less said about fees the better. To deflect concern, they promised that the lawyers' cut would not come from the $368.5 billion settlement fund. Instead their fees would be set by a panel of independent arbitrators and paid separately by the industry. But that hasn't made the issue go away.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich (R-GA.), has warned about "windfall profits" for the anti-tobacco lawyers. As he and fellow Republicans are well aware, trial lawyers give generously to Democrats - and with the tobacco deal could have plenty more wealth with which to be generous. Rep. Henry A. Waxman (D-CA), a leading tobacco foe and critic of the deal, also said the issue is likely to get scrutiny when Congress debates the settlement sometime after Labor Day.

Other observers, including Stanford University law professor Robert Rabin, said the fees "can't be regarded as ... entirely separate" from the settlement because in agreeing to the $368.5b., cigarette makers took into account how much extra the lawyers might get. Usually lawmakers would have no interest in attorneys fees, but then, they normally would have nothing to do with settling civil litigation.

"The private lawyers and the state attomeys-general stepped into a vacuum," said Matt Myers, executive director of the National Center for Tobacco-Free Kids, who helped negotiate the deal. "Thirty years after the first surgeon general's report ... Congress had done virtually nothing to set in place ... policies to reduce tobacco use."

The irony is that lawmakers are likely to strengthen the deal if they ratify it at all. Changes would be aimed at a host of perceived defects - including provisions limiting the authority of the Food and Drug Administration and penalizing the industry if teen smoking isn't reduced by targeted amounts. However, "in a sense, you can say it's the tort system which has forced Congress to take actions which it would never take on its own," said Michael Pertschuk, former head of the Federal Trade Commission and a veteran tobacco foe.

In the 1970s, lawsuits over injuries and deaths from exploding fuel tanks on the Ford Pinto evectually triggered a federal indispensable in bringing the industry to the table.

A nationwide consortium of law firms, known as the Castano group, exerted pressure by filing 21 statewide class-action suits against the cigarette makers. More poteot still were the lawsuits filed by 39 state attorneys general, who assigned the real work of the cases to private lawyers. In Mississippi, which filed the first of these suits in May 1994, private lawyers brought Attorney-General Mike Moore the idea of : suing the industry to recover tax funds spent treating sick smokers. Moore then hired private firms to handle the case - not that he had much choice. Facing a hostile reaction from the state's governor and legislature, Moore could only pursue the case on a no-cost basis. It was much the same for other attorneys-general who later joined in. Few, if any, had the political or budgetary freedom to commit millions of dollars in state funds to a novel assault on an industry that had never lost in court, Only with private lawyers fronting the expenses and doing the work could the suits proceed.

It was a case of mutual advantage, said Stephen Gillers, a New York University law professor. The attorney general got "to bring a case that his office was probably unequipped to bring," while the private lawyers got "a halo effect" from having 'the people' as their client.

Whatever its flaws, the proposed deal announced June 20 represented a dramatic shift in US tobacco policy, which had been long on scathing rhetoric but short on substance.

Police put the bite on Christian Slater

Actor Christian Slater told police he had taken heroin and cocaine the morning he allegedly bit a man in the abdomen and scuffled with officers after a party, according to police reports.

Officers who wrestled with Slater last week said he told them he had taken the drugs and had been drinking for days. Slater's btood-alcohol level was measured at 0.24 percent. well above California's legal limit for drivers of 0.08. Slater, 27, was arrested for investigation of assault with a deadly weapon. He was freed on $50,000 bail.

Slater, whose movies include True Romance and Heothers, was confronted by police in a stairwell of a condominum where the party had taken place. He tried to grab an officer's holstered gun but was subdued with a hold that left him unconscious, police said.

Slater was altegedly punching girlfriend Michelle Jonas in the face when a resident of the apartment, Jacques Petersen, stepped in to help. Slater allegedly bit Petersen. (AP)

Drug abuse also strikes Chinese actress

A Chinese actress who starred in an anti-drug film has died of an overdose. The death of 30-year-old Zhu Jie, a former drama-school classmate of screen superstar Gong Li, was confirmed Tuesday by Beijing Film Studios, the Xinmin Evening News reported.

The article was one of the first reports by official media of a drug-related death of a Chinese public figure. Drug abuse in China has soared since the loosening of social restrictions with economic reforms, and stories of drug abuse among artists and performers are increasingly common.

Zhu's movies included Thunderstorm, based on a popular Chinese play, and Beijingers. Xinmin noted the grim irony that she also starred in Grownups, which criticized illicit drug use in Chinese artisoc circles.

Altman planning to cut out

Veteran director Robert Altman is threatening to remove bis name from his latest film, The Gingerbread Mon - a dark thriller based on a John Grisham original screenplay - in a dispute with Polygram Pictures.

The studio says it brought in an editor to recut the $25 millioo film, which stars Kenneth Branagh, Robert Downey Jr. and Robert Duvall, after four disappointing test screenings. Sources at Polygram said the studio had told Altman what needed to be fixed and asked him to make the changes.

When his final version still didn't meet studio expectations, Altman met with studio chiefs and accepted their decision to re-edit it in "a handshake agreement."

But the 72-year-old director told associates that studio exec-

Rolling Stones gather no moss

By ELLEN WULFHORST

The Rolling Stones on Monday announced the details of an upcoming world tour, promising appearances in intimate clubs as well as cavernous stadiums that hold tens of thousands of fans.

Arriving at the press conference with typical bravado in a red 1955 Cadillac convertible, the band members disclosed the details of their Bridges to Babylon tonr under the shadow of New York City's landmark Brooklyn Bridge. The tour kicks off September 23 mances in South America and Southeast Asia, Mick Jagger said. Appearances will range from clubs and theaters with 2,000 or 3,000 seats to more traditional arenas, stadiums and racetracks.

The smaller venues are a chance to experiment a bit, guitarist Keith Richards said, "Yon want to touch the base, go back to where yon came from," he said, "It gives us a chance to change the music. For us, it stops it from becoming rote.

Jagger, 54, joked with reporters who he said always want to know if this would be the band's last in Chicago and wraps up next tour. jumping in among the members of the press and turning to face the remaining band members on the dais.

"Is this going to be your last tour?" he asked them.

"Yeah, this and the next five," replied the graying, 53-year-old Richards.

Outside heavy security, a crowd of fans waited, hoping for a glimpse of the rock 'n' roll legends.

They're awesome. They're going to set a world record with this tour," said Anthony Angello, a fan from a nearby suburb. "Anybody who doubts them will going to show these young bands how to do it."

Others, like 13-year-old Amanda Nicodemus, were less impressed. She attended the Stones press conference because her parents own the vintage car rented by the band for the occasion. "I think they're old," she said with a bored shrug.

"They look old." Bridges to Babylon, the Stones' new album on Virgin Records, is set to be released on September 30, Jagger said. The album is "full of

Morris and Mizrahi's glass menagerie

US choreographer Mark Morris, the enfant terrible of dance, and American fashion wonder boy Isaac Mizrahi combined to provide the Royal Opera Covent Garden with a sensadooal comeback at the Edinburgh International Festival.

Morris, 40, brought his talent for fun and extravagance to a little-known 18th-century French opera-ballet and turned it into a riot of color that is likely to prove the hit of the threewcck festival.

With Mizrahi, 35, designing the costumes for Jean-Pbilippe Ramcau's Platee, the pair transformed the stage into a giant glass terrarium populated by dancing frogs, exooc birds, copulating sea turtles, and slithering snakes.

Morris, seen as one of the greatest choreographers, was making his debut as a director with the prestigious Royal Opera, which returned to the Edinburgh Festival last week for the first time since 1961. (Reuters)

s part of its "Voices and Visions" poetry series. Channel 8 will tomorrow air an Aspisode about the great Russian, pre- and post-revolutionary poet Anna Akhmatova. Born in 1889 to an aristocratic family, Akhmatova began writing in her teens and immediately was expected to become a great poet.

Not everyone was enthusiastic abont her newfound career and her father asked ber not to bring shame upoo his name. She complied, taking the name Akhmatova, whose origin is from the clan of Genghis Khan.

At the turn of the century, Russia was experiencing a burst of artistic genius in the ranks of poetry, dance and music. Akhmatova's inchoate work dealt with the inner life of a young woman's nature.

She frequently read her work at the bohemian String Dog Cafe. Though her nature tended to be cheerful, it was reported that when she read her poetry she became extremely somber. Her work focused on human interactions in general, as well as the sad moments of love.

Often painted, ber beautiful figure and aquiline nose became her trademark.

New communist Russia demanded she write about society as the state saw it and not as she did. She daringly refused to comply, but yet resisted temptations to emigrate.

... I hear whispers to 'leave Russia forever.' I will wash the blood from your hand, pluck the shame from your beart. I will hide with a different name your insults and your hurt."

Her ex-husband shot for anti-Bolshevik activities, her only son imprisoned because of her poelry, and her poetry banned left her dejected and DOOI.

"I drink to our ruined house, to our loneliness together. To you I raise my glass, to lying lips that have betrayed us, to dead cold pitiless eyes, that the world is brutal and coarse, and that God has in fact not saved us."

Akhmatova dared not comnuit her poem "Requiem" to writing and passed it along verbally to other poets. "At dawn they came to take you away, you walk like death, I walk behind. In the dark room children cry and the holy candle gasps for air."

During World War II Akhmatova was called upon to encourage the besieged masses of Leningrad over the radio. But in 1950 she was banned from any further publication for not writing "socialist realism."

Left without ration cards and worried for her soll-imprisoned son, she finally wrote what the communists demanded from her: a coral colored picture of Soviet life. "Where the lanks had rumbled there are peaceful tractors."

It had no effect. He son still languished and she remained a cultural outcast. After Stalin's death, she wrote. "You wish that life could be glued together where it was broken off. But there is no such glue. Prisoners will return and two Russias will face each other. Those who were prisoners and those that made them prisoners,"

OPERA WORKSHOP REVIEW Summer opera leaves 'em crying and laughing

By MICHAEL AJZENSTADT

The final week of the summer opera program of the Israel Vocal Arts institute opened with two powerful presentations that focused on two pivotal extremes of the operatic repertoire - the traditional tragic romantic opera of the 19th century on the one hand and the satirical French operetta of the same period on the other.

Both events were highly successful with the standing-room-only audience applauding with unbounded enthusiasm and justifiably so, because both productions suggested that the present and future of opera in Israel is brighter than ever.

Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin, a masterpiece in its own right, was performed by vir-mally an all-local cast, mostly opera singers who came here from the former Soviet Union and were singing in their nadve tongue with elan and ease. It was a stunning operatic evening, very carefully and stylistically directed by Joshua Major and conducted by Paul Nadler.

Among the singers, Denis Sedov presented all the warmth and love of prince Gremin, Evgeny Shapovalov managed to project the despair of a young man just before his death in a most touching manner, Lili Mogilevsky and Galina Malinsky added magic to the more elderly members of the dramatic personae, Susanna Poretsky was a very spirited Olga with her warm and caressing mezzo, and Victor Kotik, in one of his best performances to date, succeeded in presenting the spite and nonchalant manner of the protagonist.

Some of these opera singers, namely Sedov and Poretsky, already grace the lead-ing opera stages of the world and some will undoubtedly do so in the future.

Like Larissa Tatuev, for example, as the heroine Tatyana. This time she projected the naive young girl turned into a mature society lady at the cost of her youth in a most delicate and passionate way in front of 300 people. In the future she will undoubtedly do that in front of thousands, because this role seemed to have been written for her. Her humane portrayal was the vocal and dramatlc pivot of the entire production and she deserved the enthusiastic reception she got from the audience.

Offenbach's La Grande Duchesse de Gerolstein, under the direction and baton of Richard Barrett, was one of the funniest operatic performances 1 have seen in a long time. This hilarious romp mixed the original French lyrics with Barrett's own English dialogue.

The audience laughed their hearts out but there was much more than good laughs: there was good singing. 100, especially from the young lovers Hilda Ramos-Diaz and Stephen Guggenheim.

Yael Zamir, in the title role, is a splendid character mezzo who had the audience in the palm of her hand. The many smaller roles were all impressively portrayed by young and upcoming Israelis and visiting opera singers

Lucy Amer was marvelous at the piano, as was Tanja Kopilev in Onegin. Bottoni line? It was summer opera on a small scale but with loss of panache and excitement.

| TELEVISIONELANA CHIPMANFor those interested in American culture, you may want to watch Lenny Bruce on ITV 3 (33) at 10:20 p.m. This 70-minute documentary paints a pro- file of one of America's most influential comedi- ans. This Jewish satirist broke the ground for many by being the first to address various taboo issues such as racism, dis- crimination, and religion. Bruce was arrested several times for using obsceni- ties, but this did not stand in the way of his becom- ing highly successful. He died of a heroin overdosa in the mid 1960s. | 6:30 News in Anhier 6:34 Kews in Anhier Isso News in English 22:00 Cartoons 22:00 Cartoons 22:00 Cartoons 22:00 Cartoons 22:00 News in English 22:00 News in English 22:00 Cartoons 22:00 News in English 22:00 Cartoons 22:00 News in English 22:00 Cartoons 22:00 News in English 22:00 Cartoons 21:10 Spenner for Hein 22:00 News in English 22:00 Cartoons 21:10 Spenner for Hein 22:00 News in English 22:00 News in English 22:00 Cartoons 21:10 Spenner for Hein 22:00 News in English 22:00 Cartoons 21:10 Spenner for Hein 22:00 Cartoons 10:00 Cartoons for J 10:00 Cartoons for |
| If you are more inclined towards British culture, go for Death of an Expert Witness, a six-part mystery series based on a hook hy P.D. James, on ETV 2 (23), at 10:50 p.m. The protagonist in this series is, again, police inspector and poet Adam Dalgleish, played by Roy Marsden, who is called in to investigate the murder of a girl found dead near an abandoned mine. FILM MADINA HOFFMAN T GROSSE POINTE BLANK – In this Michigan hometown for the first time in a decade to attoch his high-school reuoion. The joke, of course, is that Cusack looks more milkman than hitman: he has searchiog eyes, padgy checks and the lanky huild of a temag- er, and despite he fact that cold-hlooded mur- der is his character's line of work, he hlushes and can't keep his voice from going fluttery whoo he's reunited with his old girlfrieod Amitage, the film belongs to an emotionally imited but amusing category of hip satirical picture – of which Heathers is probably the classic example – that treat adolesceoce in the | PHOGRAMS Perogram Perogram <td< td=""></td<> |

Bonn urged to pay to act against Holocaust claims By ERIK KIRSCHBAUM

BONN (Reuters) - Germany should make long-overdue restitution payments to Eastern European survivors quickly, before the elder-Holocaust vicunis die. Israel Singer, secretary-general of the World Jewish Congress and leader of claims delegation to Bonn, said sel, said: "The current process means vesterday He said time is running out for war criminals can enter Canada and many who never received any delay, if not evade, depontation. Canada will Reuters before the start of two-day avoid being a safe haven for Nazi and negotiations with senior German government officials. "The average other war criminals currently on the run only if they know they will be age of the Holocaust survivors is now over 80. This gives us very littried here in criminal court for the the time to resolve the issue. It's five minutes after 12." Zuroff, who has tracked down sevwith," Singer said, adding that he had received assurances of support from Chancellor Helmut Kohl. "We are very optimistic. We have great hopes that these talks will indeed serve to deal with those people who are aging rapidly." Singer said the delegation, made up of officials from the US, Israel, and Eastern Europe, would discuss the issue with Chancellery Minister Friedrich Bohl today. Other meetings are planned with Finance Ministry officials.

Herbert Schmuelling, a government spokesman, said Bonn is also eager to reach a quick settlement with the survivors.

Germany has paid about DM 100 billion in compensation to victims of Nazi crimes and injustice, but Holocaust victims in Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union were excluded from remuneration during the Cold War.

After the collapse of commu nism, lobby groups said that Eastern European victims were paid only a fraction of the amounts given to Western victums. They argue that eveo though Germany set funds aside for them, this only amounted to a maximum of DM 1.000 in one-time payments, while people living in Germany received about DM 500 a month. Many victims' groups have been further angered by reports that Germany has been paying supple-mentary pensions worth billions of marks each year to Nazi war criminals. Bonn says Germany had set aside DM 1.5b. for Jewish Holocaust survivors in Poland, Russia, Ukraine, and Belarus, and argued that these hard-currency payments went far in the poor economies of the former eastern bloc. But campaigners complain that victims in some countries have received no payments at all.

Book: Top German doctors experimented on human beings

BONN (Reuters) - Huodreds of German doctors who performed cruel medical experiments on human beings during the Nazi era moved unpunished into post-war careers, according to a new book.

Ernst Klee, author of Auschwitz: The Nazi Doctors and their Victims, said in an interview with ARD television yesterday that other physicians emigrated to the US to take up research jobs.

"The elite of the medical profession was involved, that can be proven," he said. "With these experiments, they laid the basis for their careers."

Typical experiments included the injection of concentration camp inmates with the typhoid virus, limb amputations, and causing death by exposure to extreme cold.

One German physician who Klee said had cut off the legs of female camp inmates for experimental purposes is still occupy-ing a highly paid research post at a German pharmaceutical group,

"He earns more each month than his victims were able to earn in the rest of their lives," Klee said.

"Hundreds of people were, if they survived at all, turned into life-long invalids." He didn't identify the doctor. Klee said the initial lack of evidence about experiments on humans and the Nazi euthanasia program meant very few doctors and other medical workers came before the Nuremberg war crime trials.

The most infamous Nazi doctor of all, so-called "Angel of Death" Josef Mengele, is believed to have escaped to Argentina and to have lived there until 1979.

He performed buodreds of gruesome medical experiments on twios, gypsies, and dwarfs at the Auschwitz camp between 1943 and 1944, in an effort to produce a German "master race.

Klee said the extent to which the German medical profession had participated io Nazi war crimes is at least as significant as the continuing examinations of the role played by other parts of German industry.

German banks have recently been urged to follow their Swiss counterparts and reveal their role io the "Aryanization" program that stripped Jews of their money and other assets.

Insurer Allianz AG is meanwhile trying to secure an agreement with Holocaust victims who are part of a US class action against 16 European insurance firms. Holocaust victims say they are owed billions of dollars on policies signed during the Nazi period.
